Another angle to the PAPANACE group which is worth some consideration is that it attempts to base itself on the Macedo-Rumanian ethnic minority (Aromenians), and as such has apparently appealed in the past to the Macedo-Rumanians living in the U.S. for financial support. The American Macedo-Rumanians are comparatively a very small group, living mostly in eastern Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts, without much group consciousness or unity. Some financial support for PAPANACE has been reported, however. There are probably more Macedo-Rumanians in Greece and Yugoslavia than in Rumania itself, and they are not regarded as a significant minority group. No reports indicate that there is a "political leadership" of the Macedo-Rumanians inside Rumania today, and if, as it appears, the PAPANACE group claims to be the "political leadership" in exile, the claim is highly questionable.
